

The dean from foley college has given a recommendation to the president of the college to make him assure the students by increasing the enrollment of job placements to their college after when students become graduate. Many administrators from the college believe that this would be a way to competing against larger and more prestigious colleges for encouraging students to begin preparing their career as soon as they enter college. Students can start preparing for their career as soon as they join in college. The argument is about to express an assurance to the students for job placements after the graduation competition. I feel the argument is quite fallacies that makes the given argument absurd.

Firstly, Foley college is small liberal arts college. Some students join arts college to reduce stress, increase personal enjoyment and make this interest as hobby. This makes students demotivate to make career in arts and searching for jobs related to arts. So, assuring job placements to students after graduation create interest in students to join in arts.

Many administrators in the college believe that this strategy is a way for foley college to compete against larger and more prestigious college for becoming themselves as a prestigious institution. It will take many years and efforts for a college to become as a compete. So, Foley college must increase the standard of teaching, giving proper training to the students related to arts and offering better placements than what other colleges offer.

Finally, in the given argument they promised providing jobs on completion of graduation this does not ensure students that they will complete the coursework. By this assurance students will less concentrate on their studies let us suppose imagine that if a student knows that there is an assured job opportunity present on the completion of his or her course it could lead them to remain unfocused on his or her course work and this would lead them to obtain low grade. This could also further lead to get a job opportunity for those who has not gone through the course period as an output of this we would see an unskilled person to be in the job.

Therefore, after considering all these factors it concluded that the given argument cannot be consider as logic under any circumstances. Thus, the promise given by dean of job placements on completion of graduation which increase the enrollments is not logic and it would create doubt. Therefore, the argument in the present form is quite implausible.
